Words failing, his feelings went into his eyes, and he was quite satisfled with the answering flush on Netta's cheeks as she hurriedly withdrew her hand and Mrs. Stanford reappeared.

When he reached his room and emembered the work that was before him he felt pretty sick of the whole business.

After waiting a suitable time, he took his bag and tools and crept silently downstairs, and then started in excellently workmanlike style to pick locks and collect the silver. When he spread the plunder out on the floor and began to pack it into his bag he congratulated himself The next minute he was staring into the white face and flashing, scornful eyes of Netta Marchly.

THE BABY AND YOU

It is always in order to talk about the duties mothers owe their children; they are used to being lectured. thus impersonally, and usually by old women of the opposite sex. The duties which other people owe to mothers and their offspring are less discussed, and may properly be scheduled here, says the New York "Mail."

Never give a mother unsolicited advice as to how to feed or tend her child. She knows the child, and you do not; she has the counsel of her doctor and is probably letter perfect in one of two practical hand-books on the care of children. There is nothing a mother resents quicker than officious advice in this line.

Never *think it is incumbent on you, or even permitted to you, to kiss anybody else's baby merely because you know the parents. Many affectionate mothers never kiss their own infants; the mother who uses distilled water and boric solutions and is particular that the young one shall have germ-free food is seldom a baby-kisser.

In a car always give up your seat to a mother with a baby in her arms. Most people do, more credit to them! Do not call a baby "lt." Do not ask the parents if the youngster keeps them awake o' nights. If you are a stranger and the baby smiles at you in the car or the park, and thrusts out his fist as if to shake hands do not take him up on the matter. Baby will not mind your abstention. The mother would raththat he had not made one blunder. er you would shake hands with some one, and of course she would much profer that friendly grin, directed strictly toward the infant, and the murmured word 'preclous," likewise directed, are all that the occasion requires or permits.

Do not use the baby's interest in yourself, if you are a stranger, as a leverage to attempt a flirtation with the mother. By observing this admonition you may save yourself a saubbing, and the baby, perhaps, a subsequent spanking.

From the turtle to the ruminating sheep, and thence to the soaring eagle of today may be said to be typical of the progress of the world in monetary affairs. We might go on farther and through mysterious and supposedly missing links trace the connection from the mint of Juno Moneta to the mint beds of the southern states, but since prohibition has put these latter out of business we forbear. But it's funny. just the same to study natural history from the low crawling turtle to the high flying eagle on the coins of the world.

Home Made Soap Shaker.

A satisfactory and decidedly convenient soap shaker can be made out of an ordinary baking powder can. Drive a number of holes in the top of the can with a nail and throw into the can all scraps of soap which are too small for use and put the top on

When washing the dishes, put the can into the dishpan and let the hot water run into it. Then shake a few times and a fine soapsuds will be the result. When not in use, stand the can on a saucer, as some of the water is likely to remain in the can.

Use Old Magazines.

Old magazines will be found useful in the kitchen. Place an old magazine on the shelf of the stove or on the kitchen table and use it for standing hot pans and kettles on. When one sheet is soiled it can be torn off, leaving a fresh one on top. On ironing days place an old magazine handy and use it for wiping and testing the iron on. SELECTING LINENS.

It matters not how fine or how numble is the first little home, the bride naturally wants dainty linen for the dining room and her beds. It seems to be a natural pride, dating back ever and ever so long ago when grandmothers planted the flax, gathered it and spun the cloth for these very articles. No bride of that period ever went to her new home without these luxuries, but of course today the average bride never thinks of such articles until necessity demands them, then the eager search for what is best. Perhaps a young woman had best take an experienced person with her when shopping, for the uninitiated is liable to purchase "something just as good," paying the price of the very best. There are some absolutely new designs in damask table covers and napkins. A beautiful one has the snow drop center, with garlands of flowers as a border, twining in and out of straight lines, and we see square table covers with baskets of flowers in the corner, a departure from more conventional patterns. Medallions, the horn of plenty, cupids, grapes and the like have taken the place of smaller figures. The Cupid table covers are quaint and pretty and this is one case where Cupid can "be laid out flat" if harmony is not the best in the sacred precincts of the home. Perhaps the sentimental bride would not have her ideals so quickly shattered if she could gaze on the little god of love while Jack "roasted" the first breakfast of oranges, lithia water and unnamable hot cakes. For luncheons and all informal dinners, the doilies are round. These doilies come in different sizes and are to be used on the highly polished tables. They are expensive little triffes to launder, but most women do the work themselves. I once "A greater number of persons than heard a woman make the remark that ter of Boston. So long as the hearts of men contain one chamber which does not grow with them beyond childhood so long as women bear children, the circus will live-which will be forever

The circus is immortal. The circus is an elusive thing; a clear-skied morning, and it is here, filled with boasting and noise, laughing at our troubles from out of a Falstaffian mirth. Then in the murk of night it slips away again, as if it knew that we were but children and would be gone without farewells. Rough men marshal it, grimy with labor; rude are its jests and coarse its people seem at times; but down under the crust of them and the dust of the world's highway is that touch of tenderness which no circus man like. has ever been without, since they grew wise and left the rest of us
